Hi Grandma!

Thank you again for writing and the words of encouragement! I can't help but to believe this will turn out in my favor too... Thankfully it will not be left up to my very biased and inexperienced judge. With any luck, I will get a new judge and hopefully a re-hearing for bond. That, and another hearing so that the state will foot the bill for all the costs! Things are progressing too slowly for my taste, but I know everyone is doing all they can within the system. They sure don't seem to follow the rules here in Jacksonville, then again, I doubt any other county would have arrested me to begin with!

 + I have decided that she shouldn't keep waiting for me at the townhouse. It's too much rent for her to manage on her own and she says there are too many memories for her to be happy there. I had expected to be home, possibly under 'house arrest' and wanted to be there. If we had only known the government was going to play these games, she would have moved to a smaller place in January.

They sure have made a mess of things. I'm going to take them to task and sue the pants off of them once the trial is over. Not that I'm bitter or anything... 😊
Have I mentioned recently how much I dislike our government? I'd like to think it's just local politics, but something tells me this corruption is very wide spread. So sad in this day and age we're still divided by race.

It was very interesting to read about [redacted] horse clinic. While I don't share his enthusiasm for horses (they scare me!), I think it's great that they share a common interest that they love. He has such a great facility there, it's awesome that they open it up to fellow horse-lovers (equestrians?). When [redacted] and I came up for Grandpa's service, [redacted] had [redacted] leading that big horse of his around, [redacted] and telling her what a gentle touch she had. She was in heaven when she got to ride him. I wasn't worried about her safety for a moment, [redacted] is so confidence-inpiring. He really showed us how much patience [redacted] he has an abundance of.

I'm keeping up with Mom's post knee surgery progress too. I'm amazed at her speedy recovery and progress to date.

Dad is [redacted] but for me now. He and Mom have written to my Congressman, and they've drafted up another to send to Governor Scott. With all the shenanigans [redacted] take [redacted] get

I'm sure [redacted] would like to help [redacted] encouragement. [redacted] hateful place and I'm struggling to cope [redacted] as best I can. Your letters give me a lot of strength to carry on. My love to [redacted] and all the kids!
