Hi Cousin!

I have to say, I really enjoyed reading your letter! Rambling is fine, no structure is required! As I'm sure you've heard by now, I have a new, new judge. This will be the 4th, as my original judge retired before I was assigned to judge BIAS. Now that I have a judge with balls (haha), maybe the court will finally stand up to this crazy D.A. they have out here - I spoke to Matt this morning and he said some "citizen grand jury" has indicted Ms. Angela Corey (the crazy D.A.) on charges of falsifying Zimmerman's arrest warrant.

Not sure what that's all about, but if you've been following that debacle, it's eerily similar to my case. I'll make sure Mom sends you that account of the events. Something we learned during "Discovery" is that the man in the SUV drove away, parked, exited the vehicle, & 911 caller saw him and called it in. Then they drove back and they had never left. The police never searched the area where they had been and phone records show 6-8 calls to different #'s, all short duration. Like they were calling their buddies to come get the guns they stole. This is information the prosecution provided. Makes you wonder what the agenda is, cause they have no hope of a guilty verdict.

Loved your diagram depicting the oculo-rectomy!
 I've heard him say that before, but never have I seen it illustrated! Speaking of medical terms, when you get your tonsils taken out, that's called a tonsil-ectomy. When they remove your appendix, that is an appen-dectomy. Do you know the term for when a girl gets a sex-change operation? It's called an Addadick-tome.
 I feel free to use that, and you can stop telling my butt crack jokes 😊 Ha Ha! If you're serious about setting up a phone, ask [redacted] about Google Phone. She can tell you how to set it up, but you get a 904 area code number that rings to your existing phone. If you decide to do that, give [redacted] your # and a good day/time to call. They limit phone calls to 15 minutes. Like you said though, hopefully I'll be home!

I just got off the phone with [redacted]. The new judge is going to hear our motion for a bond on the 16th. If he decides to grant the hearing, he'll do it right then and there! Sounds to me like I'm going home! Speaking of home, you asked how [redacted] is doing. I think she's holding up, but this has been particularly difficult on her. She's been getting counselling; so that's helped somewhat. She's getting settled in her new apartment, though she pits at home, pining away for me...

stops by the Olive Garden on her way home now and again. Whenever we'd go out, we always preferred to sit at the bar. Anyhow, she's made friends with the bar-tenders there and one of them is an aspiring dog trainer. He wants to start a business like an obedience school or something. Our French Bulldog (Charlie) was six months old when I got locked up. I had been working with him, but we hadn't gotten very far. The trainer came over to work with him and said he's a very handsome and a very smart dog. Sit, stay and lay down were easy; I was more concerned with walking on a leash. He tends to walk up! I'm hoping I won't be on house arrest, as I'd like to walk Charlie around the big lake there at the apartment. Honestly, at this point I'm just looking forward to going home. Thankfully, I can work from home. I just hope I still have a job with H.P.! Not that I get all my legal advice from FOX News, but Mom said that a guy was saying that under Florida law it's the state's burden to prove it was NOT self-defense, rather than the defendant's burden to prove it was. If that's truly the case, then I have to ask again: Why am I here?

Think of it this way: We have an eye witness testimony placing the vehicle, with the occupants exited, in an area unsearched by police. Since we all know that you can't prove a negative, there is no way for the state to meet its burden. The defense rests, you know! I think I just had a "My Cousin Vinny" moment! I'm going to write this down and run it by my attorney! If this theory "holds water", we'll win a self-defense hearing and not have to go through the ordeal of a trial. I'm going to find a slimy, civil-law lawyer and sue this country for the reverse-discrimination. Gals see them televising that trial! Just so you know it's 2:30 AM on 7/4. I woke up with this idea after sleeping on the notion that it's the state's burden to prove it is not self-defense. I had always wondered how WE were going to prove they hid weapons. We have decent evidence to back up our theory, but no solid proof. I feel much better now. This should get interesting! Before I go - ask someone who worked on the Osprey if they have heard of the Carter Copter. Comes to know. Have you ^{and} you ^{your} ^{the} ^{the}
